

Caring Conversations

We hope that these tips will help you challenge stigma at the time it is heard or experienced.

Talking about mental health can be daunting if you feel you don't have enough understanding or if you don't know how to help somebody. Most often, people just want to be able to get their feelings off their chest without worrying about the reaction they might receive.

Stigma Free Lanarkshire have put together these 5 simple tips for how to have a caring conversation with somebody that has reached out to you.

These tips were adapted from information available from the Mental Health Foundation and Mind, and are intended to be used as a guide for conversations with others in your community.

Let them share as much or as little as they want to Let the person lead the discussion at their own pace, with no pressure on them. Try to leave any questions or comments until the person has finished so you don't interrupt them. Use positive body language, and encourage the person to continue with small verbal comments like 'I see' or 'what happened next?' This makes clear that you are paying attention and really listening to them.

Don't try to diagnose or second guess their feelings

You probably aren't a medical expert and, while you may be happy to talk and offer support, you aren't a trained counsellor. Try not to make assumptions about what is wrong or jump in too quickly with your own diagnosis or solutions. The important thing is to listen rather than to give advice.

Listen carefully to what they tell you

Repeat what they have said back to them to ensure you have understood it. You don't have to agree with what they are saying, but by showing you understand how they feel, you are letting them know you respect their feelings.

Keep questions open ended

Try to avoid asking too many questions, especially questions that only require a 'yes' or 'no' answer, or that begin with the word 'why'. Ask open questions to invite a more detailed response:

- Tell me how you're feeling?
- How do you look after yourself?
- What support do you have in place?

Provide reassurance

Reassure them that it is positive that they want to talk about their experience, what's happening with them, or that they are looking for support (if this is the case). Mental health problems are more common than people think and can affect anyone at any time. If they need further support, encourage them to see their GP or even offer to go with them if you can.
